

ABSTRACT

Aung San Suu Kyi is an activist of Democracy and one of the founders of National League for Democracy who are struggling for turning the country into a free and democratic nation. Aung San Suu Kyi has been arrested by Military Junta due to her democracy campaigns with National League for Democracy around Myanmar and her skill to make people power. Aung San Suu Kyi arrested for the third time in 2003 though Military Junta recommit themselves to allowing all of citizens to participate freely in political process. Aung San Suu Kyi detention extended in May 2009 for violating the terms of her house arrest when an American swimmer swam across Inya Lake to her house. Detentions in 2003 and 2009 happened because Military Junta did not want the competition and involvement of the oppositions in political process. The Military Junta broken their promise in order to arrest Suu Kyi in 2003 then used trespassing incident in 2009 and issued the political party registration law which states that political parties cannot legally be registered with any members "who are convicts" so National League for Democracy could not register for the election in 2010.